We specialize in reuse and recycling of electronics, clothing, waste paper, scrap metal, and other hard-to-manage assets.

- Can this be donated to someone for reuse?
- Is this safe and ecologically sound to export?
- Does this require EPA permits or certified recycling?
- What's the best, most economic, and most ethical standard for reselling this item?

Good Point was established in 2003 as a trade name/DBA of American Retroworks Inc. of Middlebury Vermont. As American Retroworks Inc. continues to provide consulting and management nation-wide and world-wide, Good Point will specifically service local New England customers. Good Point's asset management program serves solid waste districts, commercial businesses, and even home clean-outs. We can move your assets to a new location, store them for later retrieval, coordinate fair donation to 501-c(3) non-profits, or even assist you in auctioning your assets on more than a dozen on-line listserves, such as EBay or more specialized networks (for working monitors, for example).

Good Point is organized as a not-for-profit, but independent and private business. We will meet all due local, state and federal tax burdens, while working closely with existing 501-c(3) charities (such as Goodwill Industries or Salvation Army) to help them perform their charitable missions. Wherever possible, we will hire individuals from within the community, through job training programs (like those established by American Retroworks Inc. for ElectroniCycle, Goodwill, and local non-profits).

Our goal is to provide more affordable, local, and self-sustaining reuse and recycling services, based on free-market economics. American Retroworks Inc. will apply lessons learned from Good Point's operation to support research and consulting projects in the US and overseas. Good Point will provide as many services as possible within the Vermont community, while finding the best end use (usually repair and reuse) across the globe.

More Q & A About Good Point Recycling

Good Point is a non-profit

No. Good-Point is a private, not-for-profit, which pays taxes on all retained earnings. There are already several established non-profits in Vermont practicing reuse, recycling and job training; our goal is to work with existing non-profits to maximize their performance, without avoiding our local tax burden or adding to management and administrative fees.

Is Good Point a mission?

Good-Point follows leaders such as Goodwill, St. Vincent de Paul, Salvation Army, Earthworm Recycling of Boston, Recycle North of Burlington, and EcoCycle of Boulder, who have shown that hands-on management of environmental issues leads to better advocacy and realistic standards. Our practical experience helps us to solve problems and focus on achieving the best aims at the lowest costs.

Why does Good Point exist and to generate income?

From our experience with several public, non-profit, and private companies, the transportation of donations, exports, reuse, and recycling often happens at the same time as moving, restructuring, expansion, and consolidation. Currently, it is not possible for non-profits to compete with private companies in moving and storage (except by declaring "unrelated business income"). By organizing as a private, non-charitable, not-for-profit, Good-Point will be able to provide whatever services you need without jeopardizing (or abusing) a 501-c(3) tax status.
